The Role Grandparents Play in Fostering Children’s Social Competencies

Samar Shaikh
AP/HUMA 3695 - York University

ABSTRACT
In a society and in a time where the value of grandparents is decreasing due to ageism, research on grandparents is essential to sustaining the significance of their role in the lives of children. With this in mind, this study examined the relationship children have with their grandparents. It investigated the correlation between children who have daily access to their grandparents and the level of social competencies they display in their everyday lives.

OBJECTIVE
This research explored the effect grandparents can have on children’s social behaviour.

SAMPLE

COHORT ONE: Children without Grandparents

Dennis: Parent

COHORT TWO: Children with Grandparents

Penny: Parent
Chandler: Grandparent

DEFINING SOCIAL COMPETENCE

Social competencies: used by researchers to define observable behaviours in children: how they positively and actively interact with others, as well as maintain positive relationships.

Measured: ability to maintain conversation, their demonstration of empathy, an understanding of peer relationships, and the skill of negotiation and persuasion.

EXAMPLES OF DRAWINGS

Used to determine the level of connection children feel towards their grandparents

Measured by:
The size, placement, view, and activity

CONCLUSIONS AND FUTURE STUDY

Addressing Flaws in the Data:

- Sample was too small and unbalanced to be considered an accurate representation of an entire population
- Cultural and ethnic variations should be taken into consideration to avoid sweeping generalizations

Future Study:

- The role grandparents play in fostering cultural and religious understandings in children
- Longitudinal study to see how these social competencies manifest themselves in the future

FINDINGS

Although conclusive evidence of grandparents heightening children’s social competencies could not be verified in this study due to insignificant sample size, the following findings presented themselves in the research process:

- Six out of the eight participants were European: they each shared similar relationships with their grandparents and appeared to hold them to high value
- Commonalities between the participants who had daily access to their grandparents include grandparents relaying cultural and religious teachings to children
- Children who had daily access to their grandparents viewed their grandparents as additional parents

“Nonno is like daddy because he takes me to school and packs my lunch.”

[Penny; Field notes 2014]

DEFINING SOCIAL COMPETENCE

- Social competencies: used by researchers to define observable behaviours in children: how they positively and actively interact with others, as well as maintain positive relationships.

- Measured: ability to maintain conversation, their demonstration of empathy, an understanding of peer relationships, and the skill of negotiation and persuasion.

METHODOLOGY

This study employed a mosaic approach to collect data:
- Surveys
- Interviews (structured and unstructured)
- Observations
- Drawings
- Role-playing exercises

EXAMPLES OF DRAWINGS

Used to determine the level of connection children feel towards their grandparents

Measured by:
The size, placement, view, and activity

CONCLUSIONS AND FUTURE STUDY

Addressing Flaws in the Data:

- Sample was too small and unbalanced to be considered an accurate representation of an entire population
- Cultural and ethnic variations should be taken into consideration to avoid sweeping generalizations

Future Study:

- The role grandparents play in fostering cultural and religious understandings in children
- Longitudinal study to see how these social competencies manifest themselves in the future

FINDINGS

Although conclusive evidence of grandparents heightening children’s social competencies could not be verified in this study due to insignificant sample size, the following findings presented themselves in the research process:

- Six out of the eight participants were European: they each shared similar relationships with their grandparents and appeared to hold them to high value
- Commonalities between the participants who had daily access to their grandparents include grandparents relaying cultural and religious teachings to children
- Children who had daily access to their grandparents viewed their grandparents as additional parents

“Nonno is like daddy because he takes me to school and packs my lunch.”

[Penny; Field notes 2014]